Karen & Gerard says

This is a quick read and I enjoyed it a lot because of the interesting characters, the humor and the different relationships. I liked the characters and especially Eva and her twin sisters who each had different personalities and strengths. I also liked how they teased one another but also supported each other throughout the book. There was always tension between Eva and her father because of her desire to be with David and her father's prejudice against him. Eva's mother is fierce and intuitive and loves her family very much. I really liked how she came around to being on Eva's side and stood up to her husband. David proved over and over that he was better than Harold. I look forward to continuing on with this very enjoyable series. (Karen's review)

Sydnee Walsh says

This is a great love story that teaches you that you shouldn't be judged by what your parents have done.

Renea Westlyn says

That was wonderful!

I don't want to spoil anything so I will just say, what an adventure! Thank you for writing and sharing this story with me.

Beth says

This book was better written than most in the genre. But as others have commented, it was light on real history of the Oregon Trail. The description says that it was based on real diaries, but I wonder how true that could be, unless this particular family didn't run into that many problems. I thought it unlikely that the heroine's father would have kept insisting that she marry a particular person who showed his true colors early on in the story.

Tracy Sylvester says

This is a clean historical romance novel about an early wagon train from Virgil, Illinois, to the west. Eva Thompson's family decides to take up stakes and move west when the wagon train leaves. This occurs around 1827. Eva is in love with a long time classmate David Clarke but her father wants her to be beholding to the son of the Mercantile owners Harold Chapman. While on the wagon train to the west Harold begins to show his true colors. There are those who die from sickness, accident and disease. You'll enjoy the happily ever after at the end.

Oregon Bound

4 stars is what I would give this book but for some reason my Kindle wouldn't rate it. This book had everything drama suspense and romance. A good book for anyone.

Jennie says

A short story about Eva and her family moving to Oregon on a wagon train. David Clarke is on the train and wants to marry Eva but since his father is the town drunk; her father is against it. Harold is also on the train and he wants to marry Eva also. There are Indians, soldiers, disease and a wrongful death in the story.

Patsy says

This novel is a good clean historical romance which begins in Virgil, Illinois in 1852, before the Civil War when many Wagon Trains were headed out West. The Thompson family, Pa, Ma, Eva, the oldest daughter, the twins Johanna and Rebecca, and Stephen, the youngest of the family was headed to Oregon on a Wagon Train.

This is a love story with trials and hardships along the rough journey. Pa had a young gentleman picked out for Eva to marry. Eva was in love with David Clarke and had been for a long time. David Clarke could not keep his eyes off of her. David was determined to marry Eva even if he had to travel clear across the country just to be with her.

The story includes history, drama, lost children, cooking over open fires, bad weather, crossing rivers, Indians, sicknesses and deaths. I enjoyed the the story, it could have described the adventures and actions in more detail, although it was a very enjoyable read. It was a fast read and a lovely love story.

Debbie says

Love is everywhere.

True love lasts forever. Really a great story of a love that lasted through childhood. A bully that really can't take rejection. A group of people facing a new beginning with a lot of trials and hardships.

Carol J. Timmerman says

I'm not usually into Western reading but found this a refreshing change. The story seemed well researched, the plot steady and interesting with engaging and believable characters. I found the little details of everyday life and problems encountered made the story even better. Don't miss reading this book.

Kathy says

Eva's pa has decided that his family is moving to Oregon. Eva doesn't want to go but she convinces her beau to go also. She loves David and has for years but her pa wants her to marry Harold because he is rich. Harold makes her skin crawl. How can she convince her pa that David is the man for her? A short story of life on a wagon train. It could have used a better editor but was entertaining.

Timothy Blankenship says

Amazing book!

I have really enjoyed reading the first book in this series, i have already purchased books 2 and 3. can hardly wait to see what happens next, such a clean historical romance! I loved it.

S Sanders says

Enjoyed the book. Story of oldest of three daughters. Began with the fathers decision to head to Oregon, the reluctance of the rest of the family and finished partway through the journey . Sister number two story is the next book. Her father had plans for her to marry the merchants son who she despised. That was the story that unfolded as the traveled. I wish there had been a bit more detail of the daily life and landmarks but I will read the next book.
