WHEN SHE BOLDLY PICKED UP A STRANGER IN A POSH ACAPULCO BAR...

Sabrina Chase meant only to have a casual fling. She never dreamed the rugged expatriate would appear in Dallas to rekindle passionate memories she preferred to forget. They were, she discovered, two of a kind.

Sabrina had dropped out of the corporate world, while Matt August seemed to have turned his back on the military. But Matt was a mystery. An ex-major trained in Central American operations, he was as evasive about his return to the Caribbean as he was persuasive about leaving his son behind. Sabrina was concerned about her ability to care for the troubled teenager, but concern turned to panic in the face of sudden danger. As they fled to a cabin in the wilds of Oregon, Sabrina knew it would be up to her to save them both, unless Matt -- who had shared only part of the truth even as he claimed all of her heart -- returned to find them... in time.

Enjoyable read

Intelligent, self-confident heroine. Emotionally damaged (ex-military) hero who's trying to get his life together. I enjoyed both characters separately quite a lot, and by the end I liked them together. They each provided the other with the emotional support to heal old wounds.

There were some light suspense elements in JAK's signature style and some laugh out loud moments (although I'm not sure how many were intentionally and how many were because... well, this book was written in 1985.)

Overall, a lot better than I was expecting given JAK's Harlequins from this time period.

I wasn't very fond of the plot and the characters weren't interesting enough .. Sabrina was a little dull .. Matt was alright but overall I wasn't really into them .. they lacked a spark.
