How close have you come to understand hate; the dark side of love? Is there such beauty in the madness? Does tragedy comfort you more than the happiness that rest on your shore? What loss can be compared to a grieving man? With the questions, J. Limbu debuts with his heartbreak poems- a collection of dark verse and unparalleled meanings while he claims to be still living at the very line of those pages, where the words meet like a coincidence but means like a fate. The book Anemone - ( The windflower ) is like the theatre where the delicacy of a moment, the unbreakable strings of the memories such as the tragedy, romance, love, loss, lust, madness are portrayed in his poems.

A poignant reminder of the passing of time or perhaps our fading love. Wonderful! ??

My favorite poem in this collection is "The affliction in the Joy" it reads as an honest expression of the author's feelings and uses vivid imagery to describe the universal experience of heartbreak.

There are a very few other poems in this collection that reach into this same sort of deep honesty, but most of the poems here suffer greatly from an over use of an archaic thesaurus and a desire for the verses to sound poetic rather than focusing on expressing truth and evoking emotion.

The poems depicted throughout this book were very moving and relatable, the illustrations are also very endearing.
