Cheyenne says

This was a book better suited to older children who would understand that certain animals eat certain foods.

Angela Randall says

Great food-animal matching book for toddlers.

Generally, I love Eric Carle, but not this one. What bugged me about it is that it is boasted as a "first" book of food. Well, the matching game in this book is not something that a child just starting to play with books and identify types of foods can do. Natalie had no interest in this book.

Emerson and Theodore says

Typical Carle. Great drawings in the Eric Carle style. This book is a board book with horizontally split pages so that the food is on the bottom and the animal who eats that food is on the bottom. The child is supposed to match them which provides an extra level of use for this book. Too advanced for Emerson now. But he can identify the animals and the foods. Neat feature that expands the reading value of this book.

Kelly says

A little confusing. Definitely not a "first" book. This is much more advanced- it requires matching an animal with its favorite food.

Melanie says

Fun to match an animal with a food he likes to eat. Cute illustrations.

Sally says

This is a bit of a dodgy effort from Eric Carle - I hate that the animals are not named, I actually wrote the words in! The a matching concept isn't well thought out either and too advanced for a 'first' book. It is more effective as a flash card sort of thing. The artwork is nice however.

Molly says

Fun for kids to flip through and match animals with food. However, some of the foods are a bit stereotypical and a few of the animals could actually eat the same thing. However, I realize that is not the point.

Amie says

I would've given in two stars, but my two year old loved it so much we read it twice. There are better first books.

Samantha Westall says

The reader/child should match the correct bottom food with the right animal, top half, that eats it.
