Or Else #5 Kevin Huizenga

Kevin Huizenga, acclaimed author of Curses and Ganges, is back with his fifth installment of Or Else. Stories in this pocket-sized issue include an adaptation of a Giorgio Manganelli tale about a desolate world that is stricken with religious fanaticism and violence, a "special report" on household insects, a profile of a loquacious conversationalist, and an exploration of such important questions as "How are we spending our Tuesday?" Touted as one of the best new talents of his generation, Huizenga is renowned for his bursting creativity and incisive investigations of both the quotidian and the surreal.

I bought this at a comic shop. It's hard for me to make myself buy small publications, not because I actually think bigger is better, but because I'm a cheapskate. However, the teaser headlines on this cover and my previous knowledge of Huizenga's work allowed me to override my cheapskate instincts. Yay! There's a wonderful one page comic about finding a turtle. I should be less of a cheapskate more often.

Didn't care much for this one. Maybe in larger chunks it would read better, but it seems like your basic small-press, indie/self-published, self-involved twaddle.
