Wow! Such a beautiful and heartwrenching story. Each poem brought this story closer to its end, yet also told us so much about the two main characters. For Preston and Lucas love is intense, sweet and so right. This is such an amazing love story. Short story that will stick with me.

[Well, this was such a tear jerker. I cried like a baby reading the last chapters, in particular. This is the story about Lucas, a twenty-nine year old college student who is taking poetry as a means to express his feelings. His teacher, Preston, encourages his students to dig into the depths of their souls to find the emotions they are feeling to express in their poetry. It is through Lucas' poetry that Preston sees into Lucas' soul. It is through Preston's bea

I kinda feel like this makes me a bad person for not loving this the way everyone else seems to have. It's a tragic subject matter but it just seemed pointless to me. It was sad and depressing and I didn't feel like I got anything out of it. The only good thing was that Lucas was finally free of his pain and suffering.

Gawd! I will spend the next 24 hours recovering from the "ugly cry" that this book inflicted on me.

Feelz aside, it was way too much to cram into such a short story. In the end, it felt like a summary of what could be an excellent story, in the right hands.

I had braced myself for what's to come when I started leafing through the pages. Still, it did not soften the heartache that I had to endure when I finally closed the book. 13,000 beautiful words, 7 chapters of poetic perfection. I've cried a river over this and I watched the tears evaporate. Not a trace. But the pain and the loss will forever be etched in my heart. Thank you Jude Ouvrard for the beautiful prose.

This was a book covering a very emotional matter. I did not really know what it was about when I read it and it is not my norm so if it weren't so short I would have dnf.

How Do You Say Goodbye?

As I contemplate how to best express my thoughts and feelings about this novella, I am wiping my tears and praying the ache in my heart eases. My amazingly courageous nephew died in June from cancer, four days after his twentieth birthday.

Very rarely does a book make me cry, but Wonderland has made me a sobbing, slobbery mess! A piece of writing becomes more real to readers when they can relate to the characters and the storyline. When this happens, a special relationship forms between the readers and the book as the readers' emotions and memories intertwine with the author's words. Jude Ouvrard touched the depths of my soul and I am still reeling from her novella, especially the poems inside.

As I read Lucas' story, I couldn't help but think of my nephew and everything he went through and everything he will never experience. Just as it does in real life, cancer stole not only Lucas' future, but also forever altered the future of the two people who loved him the most. I was grateful that Preston gave Lucas the opportunities to be happy and loved and to enjoy a few chosen "last wish" experiences. Lucas had to dig deep to find the strength to participate, but he did it. Lucas didn't allow cancer to take everything from him!

Wonderland is a short, quick read but it packs a wallop of emotions! None of the details or scenes are drawn out or overly explained - the novella just simply keeps on moving without any downtime. I think this method of writing fits with the story because it adds to the urgency of Lucas' situation. He had to live the rest of his life in a short amount of time - he didn't have time to stop and daydream, he had to keep on going until the cancer made him stop. Cancer and dying affect every adult's life in one way or another, so every reader can relate to this story in his or her own way. Because of this, readers will develop their own relationship to Lucas' story and this novella will have a different meaning for each and every reader.

Most importantly, Wonderland reminds readers that life is precious and to never take it for granted.

*"When my eyes are closed,
I hear your soothing voice.
When my eyes are open,
I see your beautiful face.*

*When I'm sleeping,
I feel your gentle touches.
The softness and delicateness of your hand on my fragile skin.
It burns, but it's not pain.
It's love."*

I cried. And I recommend this beautiful short story to everyone.

Profound

This story made me cry. Sad tears, happy tears and everything in between. 7 years ago I was with my mother in her last days. She told me when it was time for hospice. 5 months ago my 34 years old daughter died but it was unexpected. I got to see her, in a coma the last 36 hours of her life. Then she was declared brain dead.

This story is the first time I've been able to let go and cry for her.

Thank you so much for unlocking my feelings so I could accept my daughter's death.

well...lets just reach in my chest and rip my heart out why don't we? I read the last pages of this book through the blurry haze of tear filled eyes. It's been a long time since that's happened...
