After reading Pulp Heroes: More Than Mortal and Pulp Heroes: The Khan Dynasty I saw that Reinagel had written this shorter piece focusing on the female pulp sidekicks, Pam Titan (an analogue of Pat Savage from the Doc Savage Series), Cassie Greyson (an analogue of Nellie Gray from The Avenger), Megan Meriwether (Margo Lane from The Shadow) and Whitney Van Pelt (Nita Van Sloan from The Spider). Set between The Khan Dynasty and More Than Mortal, the four heroines are on a cruise taking the place of Simon Blake The Guardian who was suddenly called away on a case.

The four women are kidnapped and taken to Hunter Island where Simon Blake was to be put on the trial and hunted for the rape and murder of Judge Armstrong's wife and daughter. Reinagel quickly lets us know that Hunter Island was formerly known as Ship-trap Island (from Richard Cornell's The Most Dangerous Game) making this a follow on from that novel. One of the hunters is Lord James Roxton, the son of Lord John Roxton from The Lost World and the other Professor Challenger stories by Sir Arthur Conan Doyle.

The women arrive at a time when there is some dissent between some of the hunters and the leaders Armstrong and Roxton. The mutiny sees the women on the run and hunted by the mutineers.

None of the women are fainting damsels in distress and react just as capably their male counterparts (in some cases they are more effective than their male counterparts simply because the hunters underestimate the women).

I really enjoyed this novel, The Hunter Island Adventure is not as epic in scope as More Than Mortal and The Khan Dynasty but that is not a bad thing as I felt that this brought a better focus on the plot with a smaller cast of characters.

(One of the problems I had with More Than Mortal when Doc Titan and The Guardian's teams joined forces I had trouble recollecting who was who from what team although that might be more on my dodgy memory.)

The four women are written as four different characters with different skills and knowledge who seem to be genuine friends who interact often with a light hearted banter and girly gossip. Not surprisingly this relationship is consistent with what we see in the two other adventures.

The Hunter Island Adventure is a good rollicking adventure and well worth reading.

This was an exciting read with interesting characters. I liked how you got to know a little bit of each characters' personality. The setting of the book was really fun. A remote island in the South Pacific was perfect for this adventure. The book flowed to a very satisfying ending.

Teenage descriptions - characters and motivations - pull down the actually rather fun adventures.

Matthew Bieniek says

Great pulp-style adventure, in the vein of the dime novels from the '30s and '40s. The four protagonists are strong women with different backgrounds, which comes out in their personalities and talents. The villains of the piece are suitably nasty, and the action carries the story along well. A fun, quick read, and a good introduction to the author's other work, which is well worth seeking out.
