Dorcas says

Noticeably more light-hearted than the earlier volumes, this one mixes, or balances, Pamela's back story with the clients' story.

Christie says

Very very strange but impossible to stop reading. Finding out about Pamela's past bit by bit is very interesting.

The slowest... The first story was not that great, the second was kinda funny and the third was... gawd... There's still something, but I didn't particularly like this issue, Park could have done it better... and... ARE ALL OF THE MEN HERE GAYS?! I mean, C'mon, some are okay, but THE 99.9% OF THEM? I hate when they use this...

El más lento... La primera historia no fue tan buena, la segunda fue algo graciosa y la tercera... ugh... Aún hay algo, pero particularmente no me gustó este libro, Park pudo haberlo hecho mejor... y... ¿TODOS LOS HOMBRES AQUÍ SON GAYS? O sea, vamos, algunos están bien, ¿pero, EL 99.9% DE ELLOS? Odio cuando hacen esto...

This manga is my first manga and I got hooked on mangas ever since.

The serie follows a special gifted woman Pamela who has somehow become immortal. She now owns a cafe where she reads tarot to very special clients too.

In each volume the artist takes the time to put tarot cards illustrations with the characters imitating certain published tarot decks. With the tarot readings her character Pamela gives it's obvious the artist knows about tarot and is not making stuff up.

There are short stories in each volume following the fantastical beings who come to Pamela for tarot readings. Some of these stories are dark, funny or tragic. There is of course a main storyline behind all these short stories that continue in each volume and it ends in the seventh volume.

The characters are interesting, you feel drawn to the story and you want to know more about them. Even the characters of the short stories are interesting and moving. My favorite character is Belus.

The drawings are beautiful and detailed and I really love the way she draws men, I find them gorgeous. I've bought two other mangas she made after I fell in love with her style.

Ok manga???

This is probably the only manga series I've read that hasn't been made into an anime yet. And I'm not certain if it ever will. There hasn't been much popularity or fandom surrounding this series, despite the fact that it is very intricately and beautifully drawn (the art is very art nouveau [sp?]) and the stories may seem episodic but they tie in with the main character very nicely. This series was what sparked my interest in reading tarot cards. I have a deck of my own now, and do occasional readings for my friends. There are some pretty depressing stories told in this series by the various characters given readings by the main character, Pamela. So, unless you have a strong will to resist the angst, this might be a little too intense for you. Otherwise, it will give you a wonderfully emotional reading experience.

Great plot twist and more back story

Unfortunately I couldn't get my hands on the second volume as Tokyopop has gone out of business. Some of the beginning of getting to know Pamela and the introduction of a new character happened in volume 2 so it took me a second to rethink the structure of the book. In this volume we get some of Pamela's history both with previous clients and personal history. Pamela is very interesting and the clients she see's all have great stories. I was totally curious about where the interpersonal stuff with the dragons was going.

Frank Taranto says

Three interesting stories and the art is growing on me. These books use supernatural creatures in a different way.

Anastasia says

Things are getting more interesting! I love the characters, even the ones that show up in one chapter. And there are so many gay couple. Not all of the couples, but at least half. Soo good.

Tamieka Sutton says

Didn't really grab my attention too much, but Pamela seemed, to me, to be a little insecure about her past and im not sure of everything that was going on with the tarrot cafe. But the storyline definately grabbed my attention and i look foward to reading more in the other volumes.

Sarah Sammis says

I had said in my review of the second volume that I was done reading The Tarot Cafe by Sang-Sun Park. Rhiona suggested I should keep going and the artwork style (my biggest complaint about the series) would be explained. My husband shortly there after checked out the first four volumes. I decided to read number three to see if I liked it any better than two.

Volume Three is like volumes one and two: a mixture of episodic stories based around the fortunes the main character tells and some on going plot points introduced in the first volume and carried on through the second and now third volumes.

There's a lot of lost love, broken taboos, revenge and rampantly high emotions. There's also still the artwork where everyone looks like everyone else. I always feel like I should take notes to keep track of who's who because I can't tell visually and the plot's just not keeping my attention.

I swear: I'm done. I know I'm only at the halfway point but I don't care. The series and I don't get along.

manga book!!

Miss Ryoko says

Seems everyone has a crush or is mackin' on everyone in these books. No lies. Well, what can you do?

The series isn't bad thus far, I'm just a little perplexed by the way the story is laid out. There seems to be a general storyline that the volumes are progressing with but, it's littered with random side stories that do not enhance the main storyline at all, so sometimes I sit and go "And...what was the point of that?"

Don't get me wrong though, I am enjoying the series. Sometimes I just wonder about these things.
