(Review) Outpost by Joe Hart Synopsis:

A remote fishing trip in the Canadian wilderness promises relaxation and fun for four friends. But after catching a fish that should have been released on a secluded lake, the horror truly begins. And something has followed them back to the Outpost.

Review:

The perfect time away from home. A fishing trip far from the touch of civilization. Perfect until the guys catch something never before seen. That's when the horror begins. This was a great short story that has a ton of woodsy, calming atmosphere and just a touch of getting to know these characters before the horrors begin. I hope Joe Hart comes back to this horrific, serene setting again. I would love to read more about this lake and the horrors within.

I really liked this story.

Pick it up on Amazon here.

Like the old saying goes: You are what you eat.

Likeable read with a slightly creepy psychological twist. I guess it loses a few stars because I wasn't big on the subject matter on fishing.

Rating - 3.45/5

Another frightening short story from Joe Hart. This is my second helping in one day. But why does everything have to involve water and slithering things...this is going to haunt me tonight when I try to sleep. Must read more

I've read a few stories and books by Joe Hart now and find I enjoy some more than others. This one was one I didn't love as much as other short stories he has written.

I struggle to find what genre to sit his books in, some seem like modern horror, others suspenseful, but I'm a touch confused regardless. It's marketed at horror but it's not the least scary, weird perhaps but no scare factor here.

The writing is always very good, a definite strength with this short story but I found the plot a bit lacklustre, it had a lot more potential to be more scary and thrilling. I think packing in more scare factor early on would have really lifted the game on this one.

Lukewarm on this one, just okay, middle of the road, I've read much better from him by far. Only 2.5 stars from the Booklover Catlady on this one I'm afraid. Next.....

This is a wonderfully written short story about four men who go fishing in a river in a remote part of Canada. Who is going to catch the biggest fish ? And if only that was the whole story. There are things out there that you should think twice about disturbing. There are things you might not want to know about. Don't read this before going to sleep.

Well, that was creepy. I don't know if I want to go fishing again, or eat fish for that matter! Pretty good for a Kindle freebie.

Pretty good short story with a good ending.

Hubs and I used to live in the UP of Michigan. Two transplanted New Yorkers basically living in a town of 5000, with more deer than people. The closest Walmart was one hour away, the town had one stoplight, one tiny supermarket, and a McDonald's.

Not much to do in a town that size. But, one gorgeous thing that this area had that no other can touch was a vast number of lakes. Hubs and I decided to buy a small fishing boat.

Neither of us knew crap about fishing. Neither of us would ever even be able to kill anything we caught. But it didn't matter because we never did. We spent hours on the lakes, often in the pitch black darkness. Pitch black. The only thing surrounding you was dark deep water and whatever lived underneath.

I am so happy I didn't read this book back then. I doubt hubs would have ever gotten me on that boat again.

If you want a creepy bedtime story, pick up this freebie on Amazon.

I picked up this short story on a free promotion, and I'm glad I did. It's a creepy tale about fishing in a remote, isolated lake. Sometimes other things lurk about in such dark waters. Highly recommended!

While I didn't enjoy this one as much as The Edge of Life, it was still really good. This author has a knack for creeping you out in just a few pages.

Ken says

A well-written horror short that will have you second guessing bringing home any fish from your next fishing trip.

I love fishing, and this story fits right into the dreams and nightmares of most fisherman. Nice idea. Very enjoyable!

Another great short story from Joe Hart. Reminded me a little of 'Dreamcatcher' by Stephen King. I loved the premise of the four guys fishing in the Canadian wilderness. For such a short tale, the author did a great job of bringing out each characters personalities - I think all of us know an obnoxious 'Don'!

This was a great little short read and for fans of icky monster horror - this will be right up your street. The author has a great rhythm to his writing which draws you in to the story from the start. It's one of those you simply have to read in one sitting. Going to check out some of his longer works now...
