I really enjoyed reading these stories. They made me laugh and keep turning pages. I've always liked Lory Foster's books but this was my first encounter with Joan Reeves and I find that I quite like her work. A new, good author for me to read just in time for I was running short this time of the year. Her writing style is funny, down to earth and filled with free spirited characters that grow into their.

Say Yes - Lori Foster - 2.5/5 - Sara finds her fiancée cheating on her and flies off the handle. Gavin is thrilled because he finally has a chance to try for a relationship with her. Only now, Sara has sworn off marriage and that's exactly what Gavin is looking for. So he decides to tempt her, to show her how indispensable he can be to her life and to really show her what a healthy relationship looks like. But Sara isn't done pushing for the fling that she wants, tempting Gavin at every turn. And he's just as determined to hold off for a declaration of love.

So the story itself wasn't so bad. The premise is a little shaky I think with a woman who wasn't even in love with her fiancée getting so crazy angry and then swearing off marriage. One would think she might draw the conclusion that the thing that was missing that might have made it work was actually love. But no. Sara is something of a neurotic mess and I just didn't find her or her tendency to collect animals all that charming. But I give Gavin major props for patience and putting up with her. Overall it was a fluffy sort of story which I think attempted humor but I didn't really go for it. YMMV.

The Cinderella Solution - Cathy Yardley - 3.5/5

Charlotte, or "Charlie" since she's a tomboy, just-one-of-the-guys kinda gal, is best friends with Gabe and the two of them have always challenged one another through wagers. After a wedding and a particularly hurtful realization that Gabe only saw her as another guy, not even a pretty girl, Charlie decides to take on a wager that she can get a proposal out of a guy within a month. Gabe has been perfectly happy keeping Charlie where she is in the "just friends" category, but sees that this could shake up the status quo...and he's right. Suddenly he sees Charlie as a very attractive woman and has no idea how to get things back on even keel. He's crazy jealous of the guy that Charlie does meet, but he doesn't realize what it is...he's still convinced Charlie's just a friend, but now he's attracted to her. Charlie on the other hand figures out that she's in love with Gabe pretty early, but he's not so quick on the uptake and he's likely to break her heart before long.

This was a classic make over story and friends-to-lovers combined. I like the friends-to-lovers, not so much the make over thing. I just don't like the idea that a guy has to see a woman turn into a "stunner" in order to finally be attracted to a woman (or to see her as a woman in the first place). Charlie was pretty likeable, even though she was in crazy denial over her reasons for hanging out with Gabe and accepting herself as one of the guys. She caught on pretty quick. Gabe was classic ignorant man who doesn't realize that his actions cause the very thing he's trying to prevent - the loss of his best friend. I did like that Charlie didn't walk away as a beaten down, broken doormat of a girl - instead she reminded herself that she was beautiful and intelligent and Gabe was the one missing out...but she didn't ignore the hurt. It really was an enjoyable story.
