That was odd and ended rather unexpectedly.

It was enjoyable, though.

Pushkin is definitely one of the greatest Russian poets and often considered as the founder of modern Russian literature.

He finished "The Snowstorm" in 1830. I really loved the story itself about two young people and a forbidden love, lost in the snow storm. The narration style of Pushkin is really poetical and sensitive. The improbable adventures of this little story are truly Russian, and while reading it you can feel the Russian landscape, the way of life in the Napoleonic era, the snowstorm, you can even feel every single snow flake. Nevertheless the story seems to be completely unbelievable, almost like in a fairy tale. However worth reading.

After we finished reading that in class:

One of the people in the course: "So at a wedding in Russia it's not required for both to say 'Yes I do'? Cause im pretty sure if here the bride yelled 'NO NOT HIM'" they wouldn't get married."

Teacher: "No. We just sing a lot."
