From Reader Review Chilling Ghost Short Stories for online ebook

Devin says

Good collection of traditional gothic short stories from renowned authors, as well as some new, more modern stuff.

With a title like Chilling Ghost Short Stories, you'd think the collected stories would be spooky, right? If you said, "Yes," you would be wrong. The editor actually says in the preface that this collection is more of a study in the varied manner of ghosts, and the supernatural at large. But most people don't read that until the book is in their possession (at least I didn't), unlike the title! Can you say "misleading?"

Look, most of these stories are good, strictly speaking. Maybe not stellar, exactly, but not awful, either. They simply do not scare, and if that's what you read ghost stories for (like me), then you will be disappointed (like me). The Man Who Went Too Far, and perhaps two or three others, were both new to me and were intriguing; the other worthwhile stories are already classics and are widely available elsewhere (The Monkey's Paw and The Canterville Ghost, for example).

If you scare easily or hate gore, but have a fondness for the fantastical, disregard the title and give this one a go. Everyone else, give it a pass, unless you like collecting pretty books for your personal library (because, hey, no denying the book design does look pretty cool in physical form).

Mostly not super scary. Good mix of classics and new works. Some are better than others, but that's what happens in compilations. I wasn't super thrilled by any of this book and found myself skimming quite a bit. But gothic ghost stories isn't usually my genre, so take that how you will.

RJ says

I liked some stories. Some not so much. I didn't read them all, but I read most.

Jeff McIntosh says

I'm at the last few pages of this book, but feel I've read enough of it to give an accurate review.

The book itself is beautiful, with an embossed cover, and silver endpapers.

As for the contents...another matter entirely. Several of the authors are personally unknown to me..not to sat that's BAD - just that I don't know their work. However, I'd venture to guess that perhaps one third of the stories therein have nothing to do with ghosts. As an example, Conan Doyle's short "The New Catacomb" has more in common with Poe's "Cask of Amontillado" than ghost stories.

Of course, the usual are here - Wharton, M.R. James, Henry James, Jacobs, et. al. But how many times do I need to read ""The Canterville Ghost".

Not a bad book for $10, but not a great one either.

DNF: @ 15%

Seeing Crimson Peak sparked in me a fresh love for gothic stories, and upon seeing this in the bookstore, I felt that I needed to buy it; unfortunately, it has not lived up to my expectations.

None of the tales so far have intrigued me or even entertained me, let alone scared or 'chilled' me. It has a good collection of classic horror writers inside, but the majority (mainly the modern ones) is just so boring. I've read far greater horror stories online than I have in this book.

For now, I have to leave it for more interesting reading. Perhaps I may revisit and skip around some to see if any seem worth getting through, but I do not recommend this, especially if you're looking for an adrenaline rush.

Kathryn says

This volume is one I had picked up as being apropos for my bedtime reading, and despite the subject matter, I very much enjoyed most of the stories in this book.

The stories come from famous and not-so-famous authors, and are set anywhere from ancient times and places to the 21st century. The Canterville Ghost by Oscar Wilde is more comic than scary, and The Bottle Imp by Robert Louis Stevenson is excellent. (I did not care for Ligeia by Edgar Allan Poe, or for The Altar of the Dead by Henry James, both of which I thought too wordy by far.) The Waiting Room by Philip Brian Hall was very good, as was Victorians by James Dorr. Of the three stories by M. R. James, Count Magus, Lost Hearts, and The Five Jars, I would recommend skipping The Fire Jars (and I say this as a confirmed lover of M. R. Jame's stories). Audio Tour by Trevor Boelien is good (and 21st century), as is The Psychic Fair by Cathy Smith (very good) The Overcoat by Nikolai Gogol is of an earlier date, and good. An Englishman in St. Louis by Raymond Little is modern, and quite excellent. The Legend of Sleepy Hollow by Washington Irving, alas, is written in the florid, wordy style of his generation. And, yes, The Monkey's Paw by W. W. Jacobs is that story. Finally, I must say that one of the best stories is The House, The Garden, and Occupants, by Amanda C. Davis, with ghosts and cell phones coexisting together.

I very much enjoyed reading this book (although I can think of stories that should have been included, but were not), and highly recommend it.
