Crimes Galore

Ghosts, cemeteries ransacked, the wrong body in an open grave, Sheriff Dan Rhodes has more than enough things to investigate. The plot is ingenious and the sheriff follows false trails and suffers injuries before he solves all of the problems. Through it all he keeps his good humor and enforces the law with a minimum of violence. Probably the only sheriff in Texas without a Stetson, if he wore a hat it would be white. If only he could give up Dr. Pepper and Vienna sausages. His two jailers, Hack and Lawton, are another problem: less of them and their mindless prattle would be better. Still, it is always a pleasure to visit Sheriff Rhodes in Blacklin County

Getting elected president of the historical society is deadly in this 10th Sheriff Dan Rhodes mystery. The Packer family has apparently been breeding criminals for generations. Have they finally managed to breed a murderer? Or two? But the big mystery is: Why did Vernell Lindsey think that a three-foot fence would even slow down the escape of her three goats; Shirley, Goodness & Mercy?

Ghosts and Meth dealers are haunting the town. So Who ya gunna call ? Well you can't call Ghostbusters as they have no franchise anywhere near the town, so it's up to the Sheriff to get to the bottom of the meth cooking and ghostly hauntings that are taking place. Not only that, there have been two high profile murders that have taken place in the town.

And how will Sheriff Rhodes avoid adopting three cats, to which he thinks he is allergic to. All this and more take place in this easy reading, and at times hilariously funny book that takes place in a small Texas town.

An entertaining book by all accounts.

Good story. Wasn't too fond of it at first, but it really grew on me. Of course I didn't realize it was 10th in a series, so...

When the local undertaker calls to report he's found a dead man in the cemetery, sheriff Dan Rhodes is off on another investigation, this one complicated by the return to Blacklin County of two evil motorcyclists, Rapper and Nellie, who are up to something, but what? Suspects in the death include the president of the rival historical society, a dealer in collectibles, a newly successful romance writer, and a neighbor who says she only wants to keep things peaceful. Fast-paced and full of action and humor.

With this being the 10th book in the series, you pretty much are assured that this someone was mentioned in a part book, he/she/them will end up getting "done in" in one of the next. There just aren't that many people left in his county. Still, I enjoyed this one. Also love the fact that Bill Crider feels a good story ought to be able to be told in under 200 pages.

#10 of the Sheriff Dan Rhodes series. Quick read with folksy Sheriff Rhodes wandering around picking up information and getting beat up.

Sheriff Dan Rhodes of Blacklin County, Texas, faces a couple of unusual problems: there's a ghost haunting his jail, and someone is stealing graveyard art from the county cemeteries. When Ty Berry is found shot in a gravesite, Rhodes knows Berry's mission to end the cemetery crimes may be the motive for his death. Rhodes' easy-going nature and melancholic fondness for the way life used to be in small towns, make him a likable protagonist. Townsfolk love to help him with his investigations, and after Faye Knappe makes two suggestions, she is murdered.

Fun mystery in a "typical" old Texas town, with a passel of interesting characters. It's a fun read with several crimes going on at once.

I like Bill's small town sheriff and admire his storytelling...it's my own roots in a different Southern state-- Virginia.

I enjoy listening to audios while working in the house, knitting, and cooking. This series caught my eye because it's narrated by George Guidall, one of my favorite readers. These are fun stories, set in a small Texas town and full of all the quirky characters you'd expect, and overseen by the wise and kind sheriff who oversees them all.
