Denise Hershberger says

I really enjoyed this story because it had a couple different themes that really drew me in. I love the growth that young Derrick experienced throughout this book. It is amazing how much a teen can thrive if given good attention, responsibility, and boundaries! Excellent storyline for any book!

I also really loved following Quinn's story. I loved watching him turn into a mentor for Derrick. I also loved watching him overcome his own turmoil in his life. Great storyline that is very fitting for what many people are dealing with these days. I hope that reading his story will help many people.

This book had just the right amount of romance too. I really loved Gena and Quinn. And I loved the kitties in the story too. Since my husband and I just adopted two over the summer I've developed a soft side for them even though at one time I never would have wanted pets!

I received a copy of this book through NetGalley. All opinions are my own.

This is the third book in The Buchanons Series. I really enjoy Linda's books; this one was really good. It's well written and will touch your heart. I really like this family.

Nurse Practitioner Gena Satterfields is now raising her eleven year old nephew. They had been living in the city and Derrick had been picked up by the police. In desperation she move them to her late grandparents home in a small town. Derrick was not happy about moving to a small town and is acting out. She answers the front door to the one man she hoped never to see again. He drags in Derrick with an old gun. he had been poaching on his property. How was she to keep Derrick out of trouble and keep him a way from this man. Would he recognize the boy for who he is? She had to keep her sister's secret.

Quinn Buchanon had been a football star until a tragic accident left him unable to throw a ball.

Quinn lost everything and everyone who was suppose to care about him. He bought a little cabin out in the middle of nowhere hiding from life. He works with his family but keeps them at arms length. A mother cat came to his place in the middle of the night. He hated cats but put her in his shed. He is very angry to find a young punk poaching on his property. The next day the mother cat gives birth to four kittens right in front of the punk kid next door. When the mother cat disappears the boy is determined to take care of the babies. His beautiful neighbor finally agrees to let the boy help with the kittens and it turns all their lives around.

A Journey of trust and forgiveness. These three people have endured pain and heart break, would they trust God to heal their hearts? God has a plan for them, a good plan and not of evil. God has a plan for you too. Give your heart to Jesus and watch God turn your life around.

One broken man, one lost mischievous kid, and one patient woman with a hidden promise.

From start to finish, this book will really warm your heart.

It was not only centered on romance, it gives us readers a lesson on faith, forgiveness and family as well.

Also, it tackles the issue of drug-reliability - though not extensively, but it gives us a glimpse of what drug-dependent users might go through.

The romance in this book was sizzling. The attraction between both hero and heroine cannot be doubted.

Add the kittens and the tender moments with Derrick and the Buchanon family - you won't go wrong with this book!

If you want a short and pleasing read, this is the book for you. :)

Becky Durstenfeld says

I enjoyed this book. I liked the characters. Even though this type of book is formulaic, there really aren't surprises in the book and you know the characters will live happily ever after. I appreciated that the issues were dealt with and didn't drag on and on and on, as happens sometimes in books like this. One exception - the vandalism of the homes was not resolved. I presume it will be in a future book in the series.

Tima says

Gena has moved back to her hometown of Gabriel's Crossing to raise her rebellious nephew, Derrick. She's hoping the country setting will help his resentment and rebellion. What she doesn't expect is to find herself living next door to Quinn. A football star who has also moved back home to nurse his wounds, both mental and physical. Quinn and Derrick hit it off with their love of football and concern for some orphan kittens. Gena had wanted to keep Quinn and Derrick as far apart as possible, but that doesn't look like it's going to happen.

This was an entertaining and sweet story. It was predictable, as are most romance stories, but the little touches of hometown, the slight twist about the sister, and the drama with Derrick all added up to make a fun story to read. The author did a great job of creating emotions and drama between the characters, but helping the romance to feel very real. I loved the authenticity of family and small town living. I liked it enough to check and see if there are stories about the other family members.

I received a copy of this book from NetGalley. All opinions expressed are my own.

Books and Spoons says

Compassionate, grace-filled, a tender tale of acceptance, forgiveness, finding the blessing in un-answered prayers, and about family, with all it entails, in fun and struggles.

This story dealt with some real and difficult issues that come close to home to many, yet often are rather not talked about.

Quinn's drug addiction started innocently enough, yet it escalated into something that started to change him and his life.

Chronic pain management is a careful tightrope action that needs dedicated professionals help, control, guidance and advises.

I understand the limits of the in-depth material and space the author could have gone here, yet she managed to bring out the pain, intensity and effort, even danger, it takes to detox from the pills if the control has been lost.

I appreciated how their faith played a big role in this recovery, as well finding their way to each other. Quinn relied on God's providence and guidance during his struggles. Gena praying and relying on God while navigating in the deep waters with her nephew and Quinn.

The family support was amazing. I love how they wanted to spend time with the family, even though they worked together, and cherished the time they had on Sundays.

Gena and Quinn were hot together. I don't usually say this about the couples on Love Inspired stories because for some reason the passionate love between the couples is hidden, being more sweet and adorable in nature. But there was tangible attraction between Quinn and Gena, and even though the story and their love and attraction were kept clean and sweet, there was no denying that there was something real, natural, and passionate in between them, and I loved it.

Derrick and the kittens brought a serious cuteness and adorability to the tale. I struggled a bit with the way Gena and her family dealt with Derrick and the paternity. I'm still not sure how I feel about it. Of course, it all was explained why, and well put into a frame of mind why they did what they did, but my struggle is still with the secrets, and her parent's attitude.

There're a lot of elements and events in this sincere and poignant story that made me smile, think about sunny Sunday autumn afternoons with the family, true feel-good moments of cheer.

Yet the story had a clear, serious message, not only about the drug abuse and the difficulty to come back from it but of faith, God's guidance in our lives when asked and accepted, the blessings of unanswered prayers, and the importance of a family and its support. The Buchanons have stolen my heart with their warmth and accepting hearts and minds, and I am looking forward to getting to know them better and find out about the harassment and vandalism on their construction sites.

Bonnie says

Lone Star Dad by Linda Goodnight. Nurse Gena Satterfield's sister passed away and left her son to Gena to raise and told her not to tell Derrick that his father is Quinn Buchanon. Gena and Derrick move back to her home town and ended up be next door neighbors of Quinn. Quinn was a star football quarterback in high school. A shooting accident to his right arm has him in a lot of pain. Derrick ends up sneaking over to Quinn's place because a mother cat had four kittens in his shed and Derrick goes over to help take care of the kittens when the mother cat leaves and don't return. An interesting story line.

Kathy Davie says

Third in the Buchanons inspirational romance series revolving around a close-knit family in Gabriel's Crossing, Texas. The focus in Lone Star Dad is on Gena Satterfield and Quinn Buchanon and uses third-person omniscient.

My Take

Gena, as protagonist, has quite a few issues to deal with from the secret she promised to hold for her sister to holding her nephew on the straight-and-narrow to dealing with her attraction to Quinn, the antagonist — in so many ways. And Goodnight does a nice job of twining each character's conflicts together using Derrick as the catalyst.

Yeah, Gena has her particular issues, especially with Derrick, but it's really Quinn who has the hardest obstacles to get over. By the end of the story, Goodnight has definitely gotten her message across that such difficulties as Quinn is suffering with can happen to anyone.

It's sweet to watch the softening of Quinn, the aching loner, and I like the message Goodnight sends in this, about women being self-supporting, the anti-bullying and the productive way she went about dealing with it all. Heck, Gena's productive all the way-round as she grows past her antipathy and works with her nephew. She's open to the truth, even if she does fight it.

I'm curious to see how Lila will play into the series; she sounds like such an old soul.

Goodnight drove me nuts with the teasers she dropped about the accident that changed Quinn's life. This, ahem, lack of communication, *grin*, runs parallel with the major conflict in the story. What I don't get is how stupid Gena and her family were back then. I mean, duhhh.

The romance evolved fairly well. Goodnight had set us up with Gena's background so it wasn't insta-love, certainly not for Quinn, lol. That boy has spent way too much time in his own mind.

It's a nice message: "What good is it if a man gains the whole world and loses his soul."

The Cover and Title

The cover is very family-oriented with the green field surrounded by trees under a blue sky, Derrick in the middle distance, hands up, hoping for the ball while Quinn has a smile on his face, his hands wrapped around the ball, even as Gena hugs both him and the ball. A band of deep yellow crosses the top of the cover with the genre information and the publisher's imprint is in a yellow script. Below that is the title and author's name in a deep burgundy.

The title is Quinn, his fame, his ills, and his truth as a Lone Star Dad.

Jessica Figueroa says

After the death of her sister Gena is left to take care of her nephew Derrick trying to make a new start for themselves. If only Derrick could stay out of trouble and stop pestering the next door neighbor Quinn. Unfortunately for Gena this could be a problem being that this same Quinn happens to be father to her nephew but no one knows but her it was her sisters dying wish to keep secret. With the more times their lives meets up the harder it is not to fall and harder to keep the secret going.

Overall I liked this book it was pretty good. Almost too much like the last book I read where the the aunt has a rebellious teen to watch. I guess I read the books too close to each other should've spaced it out between each other to make this more enjoyable. I couldn't help but find myself comparing because of this. I liked the characters. If given the choice Gena was made I'm not sure how I would've handed the situation she faced. This book was well written, it was a steady paced no dull moments to speak of. Overall it was a pretty good book I enjoyed it.
