We have used the earlier volumes of this for previous years. I believe it can be used well by adapting it to your comfort level. Don't think you have to complete the entire book and do every activity. There is too much for one school year alone. Pick and choose your hands-on activities, check out the suggested literature from your library, and use the text book for read-a-loud, independent reading, or use the audio book for a change. By varying your activities, adding in real books (from the suggested list), and keeping the text book readings fun, this is an excellent choice for history. I can see the potential for people to over-use this if you tried to complete it all. That is my only caution with this series.

Review for I, II and III: We met with another family to read through this together. I love it, but it loses a star because my children are not as enthusiastic about it, I'm not sure why. It works well as an audio book in the car, but it seemed more of a chore to them if I read it as part of a school day. I definitely want to go through the series again - maybe will do it as a bedtime read next time.
