Book Four in the Refuge Shifters Series

After an attempt on their lives by an unknown group, the bird shifters are forced to seek shelter at Refuge. Having spent years in their bird-skin, the adjustment for some isn't easy.

Bird shifters Takoda and Enapay have been best friends for years. Enapay knows Takoda is his chosen mate, but Takoda refuses to consider a life living in his man-skin. When Enapay starts to work closely with Dr. Gray Whitmore, he can't understand his overwhelming attraction to the human.

With Takoda's continued rebuffs, Enapay finally gives into his desire for Gray. It is soon apparent, Gray was meant to be Enapay's mate. But when Takoda's health takes a turn for the worse, old feelings resurface. Enapay is left wondering why Father Sky gifted him with two mates, especially when one of them still refuses to live as a man.

Carol Lynne's Refuge Shifters series rocks!

This book was the last one in the series and honestly, I was pouting a bit after I was done, knowing there aren't any more for me to read.

In this story Takoda and Enapay finally get their happy ending. Finally! It's not without a few twists and turns and another lover thrown in though. In walks Dr. Gray Whitmore; gorgeous, human and a genetics doctor at Refuge. Gray is immediately attracted to both Enapay and Takoda, but Takoda's less than affable personality pushes him away in the beginning.

Takoda believes he was always meant to be a crow and has lived so long in that form that he has forgotten that being a man has it's perks too. Thus, it's up to Enapay and Gray to remind him.

This was an excellent read, and my favorite of the series, but I highly recommend all of them to every paranormal lover out there!
