Joy says

One of the things I've enjoyed about these commentaries by McGee is how he places them in time (by king and other prophets). Nahum lived at the time of Isaiah and Micah and the theme was the judgment of Ninevah. Jonah lived 150 years before. "Man does not become a sinner because he sins, He sins because he is a sinner."

Habakkuk included some interesting observations about war. "People have never waged war without thinking they were doing the right thing." "In the old days when the Indians would raid a village and kill some of the whites, it was called a massacre. But when the whites raided an Indian village and destroyed all the Indians, it was called a victory."

Sadly: "Human nature does not change. The sins which were committed undercover in the backyard are now done openly in the front yard."
