i read this book on the big montana road trip and what a great companion book on a trip like that. basically they take the celestine prophecy book and turn it into a guide for how to live. may sound strange for it to be from a fiction book but i got so much out of it. it asks you tons of questions and forces you to look at your life, childhood and future and all in a totally fresh perspective. for example it asks you at one point to pretend that you are a fetus about to pick parents and to list all of the reasons that you would pick your parents out of all of the people on earth. what did they have to offer you what could you and your unique personality offer them? what an amazing way to look at it. for me this was a real eye opener. i remember reading and dawson saying every now and then you are missing all these views... and be me saying i'm almost done i promise..well it was a good book, i'm sure y'all know how that is.

I enjoyed this book.

It's an informative book for those who are starting the ascension process. A great book of validation for those already seeing this in action. Just confirms a lot of what I have already began to do on my own spiritual path.

The author wrote about what's happening in this world now and the direction its shifting, so accurately that too 15 years ago. If that's not vision, I don't know what is. Also none of the concepts were super imposing although quite a lot to take in, so best if read in breaks rather than at a single setting. As they say, the teacher appears when the student is ready & nothing is ever just a coincidence, nor is reading this book. Amazing experience, truly!

Some interesting information on higher spirituality and living your best emotional life. I like how the book was organized and divided into chapters then subtopics, as this allows the reader to skip parts that don't necessarily apply to them. Thanks to my best friend, I received this book at the perfect time in my life.

If you enjoyed this book, I also recommend Chopra's The Spontaneous Fulfillment of Desire.

so far, I am obsessed with this book. my mom has been pushing me to read it for YEARS now, and I thought I wouldn't be into it since it sounded wishy-washy spiritual-ish. However, it has given me great insight into the energies of others, as well as myself. This book also talks about "coincidences" and how positive thinking really controls your health, like blood pressure. Pretty fascinating stuff.

Now that I finished, there are definitely parts you can scan/skip based on your interest and needs... it can get slightly hokey.... but overall, an enlightening read.

Redfield, "Living the new spiritual awareness is a matter of passing through a series of steps or revelations. Each step broadens our perspective. But each step also presents its own set of challenges. It is not enough to merely glimpse each level of expanded awareness. We must intend to live it, to integrate each increased degree of awareness into our daily routine. It only takes one negative interpretation to stop everything...."

Very good...but The Celestine Prophecy is still by far the best!

This book delves into the emerging approach to spirituality that humankind is currently living and proves that those mystical experiences that were once laughed at can now be explained by science and are more ubiquitous than before. Synchronicity, the power of being in the present, premonitions, gut-feelings and intuitive behavior are just one of the few spiritual experiences Redfield explores. Not only science has been able to testify these are not the happenings of fools or dishonest hawkers but are real episodes that are becoming more and more common. Years ago, it was impossible to talk about spirituality without being called a crazy misfit. Now, with the surge of technology, persons from all around the world are able to share their experiences as well as draw reoccurring similarities and what triggered them. Therefore, we're reaching a new spiritual awareness as we finally understand that the materialistic overview of life is no longer valid in the times we're living.

This book discusses synchronistical events (living two or more events that are apparently causally unrelated occurring together in a meaningful way) and it's funny that I came to have it in my own hands exactly through a series of acausal events: I landed on a blog containing a list of the 10 most influential spiritual books of our times according to the writer. I noticed quickly that I had read most of them. Nonetheless, the cover of one particular book struck me in the eye. It was almost as if it was more luminous than any other (luminosity is another topic Redfield explores throughout "The Celestine Vision"): it was "The Celestine Prophecy". I was magnetically attracted to it. I quickly called my local bookstore and was told that the novel wasn't available but that they had gotten just that day "The Celestine Vision" which condenses the philosophy in "TCP" without its plot and fictional elements. Clearly, this string of events was no coincidence at all... Then, I later read about synchronicity on Redfield's publication and came to find out it's not a myth and it's actually an idea that has been explored by several psychologists such as Carl Jung.

I took "The Celestine Vision" to my end of the year beachtrip and I have to say it was the best companion I could find out. Not only it helped me analyze 2010 but also gave me so much insight about what my goals should be and how to pursue them. Most importantly, it made me realize I sometimes gather my energy from other individuals by engaging into control dramas. It was a truly revealing read. I totally recommend this book to any person willing to improve his life through spirituality.

To me this is the book you should read if you're interested in what Redfield is getting at with the whole "Insight" series. Redfield gives you the reasons behind his writings, deeper understandings of the Insights, and excercises. Worth the read for those wanting to deepen their experiences.

Another leftover from my bookshelf of the 20th century. A companion book to some fiction that I have never read, I still enjoyed it thoroughly at the time. But the boundless optimism and the feeling that we were about to enter a bright new future came to a screeching halt on 9/11 2001, and I think anyone reading it today will feel a little wistful. That said, it is less superstitious than most New Age books, and the pseudoscience is mixed with portions of useful wisdom. Compared to the "get rich quick by wishing" books that make up so much of New Age, this one is remarkably sober and contain stretches that reminded me of the old-fashioned Christian teachings I have listened to, only translated into New Age language. Given how unpleasant old-time religion is for the flesh, one can understand the author sugar-coating it a bit. But as I said, I fear the last decade has not been merciful to optimists like Redfield.

I'd been experiencing a lot of synchronicity in my life, most of it without much apparent meaning beyond the novelty that the synchronicity itself was notable. Things lining up in certain ways or one event leading to another with similar coincidences. As synchronicity would have it, the Celestine Vision caught my attention during this period of time and I came to find that it focuses a lot on those synchronistic moments of life and provides examples of how to take them one step further to find or create meaning beyond pure happenstance or novelty. In that regard, this book does a great job of inspiring those who are having a lot of synchronicity show up, to take it to another level.

Unlike The Celestine Prophecy or The Tenth Insight- this is not a novel with an adventure plot. This is more of a spiritual guide and part spiritual manifesto, or "vision" for what things could be like if everyone could live in a greater awareness. In the pursuit of exploring this synchronicity further, Redfield seems to also spend a lot of time identifying and trying to outline group dynamics and energetic exchanges or power struggles as they relate to the individual ego- which seemed like a tone departure from the rest of the book- but had me considering how I fit into that dynamic and whether any of those descriptions applied to me or anyone that I'm in regular conversation with. Tuning into the subtle changes of group dynamic or conversational flow are always helpful, and for people who don't do it naturally, this provides some considerations to bring to the table and explore.

If you go into the book considering it as a set of ideas to explore and a perspective to consider, rather than a set of expectations or judgements, you'll enjoy it much more.

I just finished reading this book today. It was given to me by a good friend of mine at just the right time, when I needed spiritual guidance the most. This book went with me wherever I went for a week. Any free time I had I was reading. Listening. Learning. Highlighting. Applying. It has truly changed my life and made me learn more about myself than I ever thought I could in such a short amount of time. James Redfield gave me the back the knowledge of what I already knew, but forgotten along this journey of life. I feel more awake than I have ever felt in a long time.

This book represents an overview recap of the saga played out in the Celestine Prophecy, Tenth Insight, The Secret of Shambhala, and The Twelfth Insight : The Hour of Decision, but without the respective stories of the aforementioned books.

For me it was a nice recap of the process by which social awareness is obtained with the realization of one's Birth Vision, and then, the overall mission of humanity, which is to reach spiritual awareness in tandem with our physical environment and in conjunction with the Afterlife as well as other dimensions.

Social awareness is realized via in honesty, facing our own respective control dramas (Interrogator, Poor Me; Intimidator and Aloof): seeing what they are for, exploring (again in honesty) where they come from, and why they exist. Then, the interpersonal task is to observe when we replay or fall back into the control dramas and then, to respectively stop ourselves from replaying the dramas or continuing them.

The Birth Vision is realized in one's contemplation and realization of one's mission on Earth. Throughout Redfield's sagas, it is clear that each person is here on Earth to provide a facet of truth that all can benefit from. However and once again, we respectively do not learn this until we take a moment (meditation) and actually come to learn what our own mission is. Our respective Birth Visions provide what our mission is; what is our core interest? What is it that we are most passionate about? What situations in our lives indicated what our respective Birth Vision is? After that assessment, then comes the real test: are we in honestly, willing to commit to that vision? What are we willing to actually do to fulfill that mission?

Beyond these two, the bigger task is to integrate with people who can help with one's mission integrated with their own respective Birth Visions, which can in turn power and create a spiritual evolution, and peaceful, but profound revolution on Earth, which is the overall mission of humanity, and the next potential phase in our evolution. Yes, the book seems fantastic and idealistic. However, a lot of what we now take for granted once upon a time, was once deemed foolish, backward and impossible even one hundred years ago. The point of the book is how much farther can we go if we progressed, this time, with respect for other people, our environment, cultures different from our own and always striving to work for the greater good, i.e., basic human needs met and therefore no need for war nor strife? With this willing commitment, there is no limit as to where humanity could go; we all have to be on the same page and want to evolve past the superficial and what is best/advantageous – only for me, but at your expense ... if you really knew what was really going on.

The re-capped crucial component toward this personal, interpersonal and ultimately global evolution is to honestly look within and willing, in honesty, first fix what is within us respectively to be fixed! Again, one has to look within and want to fix our own respective control dramas before we can evolve inter-personally, and subsequently globally. It's what many religious sages have outlined to humanity for a long time, beyond the strict controlling dogmas, and it's time at this moment for us in this present time to finally get it!

The crux beyond the personal fix is that people around us have to also want to be on the same page; to see what the looming problems before us are, and be just as willing collectively, to fix them! One person can only do so much. However, collectively, we CAN do so much more! The central question is do we prevail together, or perish together? Optimism is a key, but it is not the solution. Collective and honest action toward our survival and evolution is!
