A Yankee and an outlaw have become unlikely partners in a tough Texas town. In the blockbuster new series by USA Today and New York Times bestselling authors William W. Johnstone and J.A. Johnstone, Sam Heller and Johnny Cross face a stampede of danger--ignited by one pretty little woman. . .

Angel Of Death

When a lovely lady steps off a dusty stagecoach in Hangtree, the hardest heart skips a beat--and Sam Heller falls hard for her. What Hangtree doesn't know, however, is that Julia Pepperday isn't who she pretends to be. She is the daughter of the late Black Ear Skinner, a notorious outlaw who wanted his only child to have all the advantages in life and sent her back east. Black Ear Skinner's apple hasn't fallen far from the tree, though. Julia has turned her back on the fancy boarding school and set her sights on Hangtree, because that's where Sam Heller has built a hard-earned fortune. Backed by her late father's gang, Julia is out to separate Sam from his money and destroy Hangtree in the process. But while Sam and Hangtree have lost their heads, Johnny Cross has kept his--and he's getting ready for war...

Randy says

Somewhat disappointing entry. Too short, told us about the final showdown instead of showing us, the backcover giving away one element of the plot from the beginning. The main characters, Northerner Sam Heller and Southerner Johnny Cross, sometimes friends, are not on stage enough.

Can't recommend this one

Nate says

An amazing book glued to my hands couldn't put down. My first western and a great one makes you feel like you there in the 1800s picasso of western novels

John Tallett says

Fun read. Denouement too short though.

Good!

This is a good book. It is well written and interesting from start to finish. The ending could have been better!
